Katlyn's story

Katlyn had been waking up nauseous every morning for a week. At first, she tried to ignore it. But after mentioning it to her friends at school, one of them gently suggested she take a pregnancy test.

That evening she did.

Nothing could have prepared her for the two pink lines staring back at her. Panic set in. Unsure where to turn, Katlyn did what so many young women do: she searched Google for help.

That's when she found our clinic.

When Katlyn called, we listened to her fears and helped her schedule an appointment to meet with a nurse. For the first time since seeing her positive test, she didn't feel alone.

Later that week, as she sat with her nurse, asking hard questions and sharing her concerns, her fear began to soften. With accurate information, compassionate care, and space to process her emotions, panic slowly transformed into confidence.

Surrounded by support and empowered with knowledge, Katlyn chose life!
